fascinating but much overlooked era for the modern traction enthusiast is the changeover from the old British Railways green and maroon to the corporate image Rail Blue of the new British Rail, which stretched from the mid-1960s to the very early 1980s. This stretch of time is often overlooked, but it is a period of significant change for the railway industry. The transition from the traditional green and maroon livery to the new Rail Blue was a major branding exercise that reflected the modernization of the railway. The period also saw the introduction of new rolling stock and the expansion of the railway network.
